

Hello,

I am very upset that Sinclair Broadcasting has decided to air a partisan documentary right before the presidential election. Isn't it the FCC's responsibility to stop this kind of lawbreaking BEFORE it happens? Fining them afterwards won't send a clear message. Of course they'll be willing to pay the fines - as long as Sinclair's obviously Anti-Kerry message helps the election. Those "old boys" have so much to gain - and so much money to make things happen in their favor. Please show them that the law can't always be bought.

What if Janet Jackson declared publicly that she was planning to expose herself at the Super Bowl. Would the FCC have stepped in? Of course!

If some public network was trying to air Michael Moore's Anti-Bush documentary right before the election, you can bet the RNC would take them to court - along with you - right now. And they'd be nasty about it. Maybe Congress would even launch an investigation of the FCC!

Please stop them, and keep our public airwaves safe from cheaters with money.

Tell them they can air the documentary along with an opposing viewpoint documentary after the election. That's fair, right?

Thanks.
